Tennis & Barbecue

Tennis is a game of two halves, that is half of the competitors play down one end of the court and the other half play down the other end. This year half of each team consisted of a Sixth Former and the other half was a member of staff. I am not sure how the teams were assembled but Mr Birch wasn't half lucky with his other half. Between them Esther and Mr Birch saw off all-comers and before we were halfway through the tournament it was clear that they would each be getting half of the first prize. Najib's tennis was not half bad though and he managed to win himself half a hat. (see photo)

Half an hour later the tennis players arrived at the chiringuito to join the other half of the Sixth Form, who had been playing volleyball and rounders, for a swift half or two and an excellent barbecue. Halfway through the evening our Sixth Form president and deputy presented half a quiz each, this was followed by a series of incredibly silly games. The competitors threw themselves into the games and no-one could accuse them of being half-hearted. It did seem to me though that half the time half of them only half knew what they were supposed to be doing.

All in all the evening was not half bad, in fact I've half a mind to write something about it.
